Using continuous improvement methods such as Lean and Six Sigma, state agencies in Ohio have made thousands of improvements to better serve customers by cutting red tape, removing inefficiencies, improving customer service, and achieving measurable results.

Local government can realize these same kinds of results through the use of public-sector-focused Lean Six Sigma training and application to local issues and processes.

The Local Government Efficiency Program (LGEP), sponsored by the Development Services Agency, in partnership with the Department of Administrative Services' Office of Lean Ohio, is offering grants and scholarships to local political jurisdictions for government-focused Lean training and support.

LEANOHIO BOOT CAMP: Transforming the Public Sector

LeanOhio Boot Camp is an intensive week-long training program that gets people learning and using Lean methods and tools. The entire program is tailored to the public-sector workplace and public-sector processes. This is practical training aimed at generating results. Participants will be able to use their new knowledge and skills immediately — to make government simpler, faster, better, and less costly.

The training is filled with government examples and exercises. Included is an in-depth simulation involving a prototypical agency, so participants build their toolkits by way of a real-world situation. It's perfect for people who work in government in an Ohio city, township, county, school district, or other governmental agency or organization.

Participants will be able to:

- Scope an improvement project.
- Decrease the complexity of processes and eliminate unneeded steps.
- Apply Lean tools and methodologies to make their organization more effective and efficient.
- Improve the quality and consistency of work products.
